Another Revolution in Hayti-British Opposition to the Annexation of St. Domingo to the United States-Execution of a Negro at Kingston, Jamaica.

A New Revolution in Hayti-Saget's Sup-porters Dissatisfied and Conspiring with the Piqueta-British Opposition to Annexation— English Officials Responsible for the Death of Saluave—A Chapter of History. Sr. Domingo, May 20, 1870. The steamer Tybee, for New York, was hardly out of sight of this port when a special courier arrived from the frontier with a full cargo of important inence. Hayti is starting off another revolution. vain Salvave, and set up Nissage Saget in his place. are not satisfied with their pay, and are now con-spiring with some of the Piquet leaders to pull the hatter down again. They are not yet agreed upon the new man, but from some curious intercepted letters it is known that there is "a person of distinguished every worthy son of Haytt would unite should he consent to place himself at the head of affairs." One consent to place himself at the head of affairs." One Jetter states that from Jacmel to Cape Haytien on the north there is one common resolution to create a new order of things. A confederation with the Dominican republic is proposed an event of annexation falling. Some singular revelations are made touching the malign influence exercised by certain British officials on the fate of Salerolsen. have. According to these, two officers who were on duty at the paince in Port au Prince when the city was taken by Saget state that the British Consul sent British gunners on board the Terreur, which had de-serted Salnave, to point the mortars with more pre-cision and so "shell out the Yankee's nigger" before the expected reinforcements from the interior could reach him. The expression "Yankee's nigger" is perhaps the true key to the persevering animosity of the British Consul at Port au Prince, but it may not be intelligible in the United States without some farther insight into the joint policy of the Baez and Balnave, of which scarce anything was known until serviced.

sarther insight into the joint policy of the Baez and Balnave, of which scarce anything was known until very lately.

These two officials, being personal friends and steel liberal school, had secretly agreed to unite their respective States in a close commercial alliance, hased on a free interchange of commercial alliance, hased on a free interchange of commodities, and ask a protectorate from the United States. Sainave had previously sounded France and England, and so probably had Baez, but those Powers would do nothing for them. Hayti then began suggesting to the great republic a navai station at the Mole St. Nicholas, and Baez held out a similar temptation in the Bay of Samana. As State secrets are never well kept at Washington the British Minster soon had an inkiling of these negotiations, and the party opposed to Sainave suddenly broke out in force. Plenty of arms and war material were to be had upon long credit, and a hundred means of cripping Sainave and discouraging his partisans were invented. If at any time he wished to attack Jacmel or any other point seized by rebels, the Governor of Jamaica and the British Admiral hastened to inform him that he could not be permitted to endanger the interests of British subjects residing in the place by hombarding it; but when these rebels, who were provided in some mysterious way with artillery, and even with steamers, wished to attack a city occupied by Sainave, no such process was ever thought necessary, and any British official who happened to be in the way hastened to get out of it.

test was ever thought necessary, and any British collicial who happened to be in the way hastened to get out of it.

Salnave having been hunted to death by English Procurement, in consequence of his leaning towards American policy, Baez, for like reasons, is devoted to a similar fate. Nothing can save him if the American Congress should leave him in the lurch. Expeditions against him are being constantly fitted out at St. Thomas, Jamaica and the other European colonies surrounding this island, under the very eyes or their governors, and not a finger has every been raised to check them. Any power that can give a hard hit to "Yankee designs" in this direction will be encouraged and protected, as in the case of the pirate steamer Telegrafo, without much regard to legal rights by the colonial courts in the West Indies. The disastrous effects of this one-sided neutrality is apparent in the Dominican frontier. The inhabitants there have been plundered of their howes, cattle and sheep; their homes have been destroyed and themselves driven back from twenty to thirty miles into the interior of the republic, where are living scores upon scores of families in helpiess destitution.

The region known by the melanchely title of Despoblado (dispeopled) has over it no lawful authority. Here Cabral and his fifty or sixty followers can elude pursuit of a thousand bominican soldiers, keeping the country in a continual alarm and furnishing a base for the thousand and one reports of opposition to the government circulated by the opponents of annexation.

the last Circuit Court, for the murder of a negro in the parish of St. John, was executed in Spanishtow recently under the most revolting circumstances. A Danien sanor, who knew nothing whatever of his business, was the executioner. When the unfortunate man tell, his hands became loose; the rope, which was damp, would not run, and the noose caught under his chin. To end his struggies the executioner went below and, taking the culpit by the feet, gave him a succession of jerks which finally broke his neck, and so ended the torture. At a previous execution, at Morant bay, some weeks ago, the affair was managed differently by another sailor who gave the culpit a drop of no less than eleven feet. The unfortunate man, who had everything supplied to him under the law which he asked for, had open drinking largely of champagne, hock, claret, sherry and port. Before being swung off he saide:—'Arn't you going to give me any more of that port?' To which Jack replied:—'You'll get piency of that when we swing you off the side." The man died as he fell. the parish of St. John, was executed in Spanishtow
